Hello new diary

Brand-new school. Day 3. New Kid smell coming out my pores in a fug. Ugh. The kids seem nice, but no one wants to actually hang out with me. YET. That's what Dad says. The power of YET. No one wants to hang out with me YET.

The school is ultra beige. Literally. Won't hold it against the kids because they didn't choose the colour, but ugh times two. Plus how about all the concrete? What school doesn't have grass and trees?

Dad at work until 5 so I went to the library. Started this diary, his idea for a way to channel my New Kid fug. Headphones on so I could pretend I was listening to something insanely interesting instead of being Dreadflock no-mates.

There's a noticeboard in the library foyer. I love a good noticeboard, especially the one in the supermarket back home. This one's a classic. A notice from a guy who's lost his goat. Naenae dirt man, who wants to sell a pile of dirt. A galaxy hidden in the palm of your hand?? Who are these people? What can you do with a pile of dirt?

A librarian was patrolling the notices. Pointy eagle glasses raked up at the corners and a cardy straight off the rack at Cat's Protection League. A collection of badges: 'Save the Dinosaurs (from themselves)'. 'A Philip Larkin a Day Keeps the Sunshine Away' (Philip Larkin?). She was pulling out pins, screwing up notices. Enjoying a tidy-up.

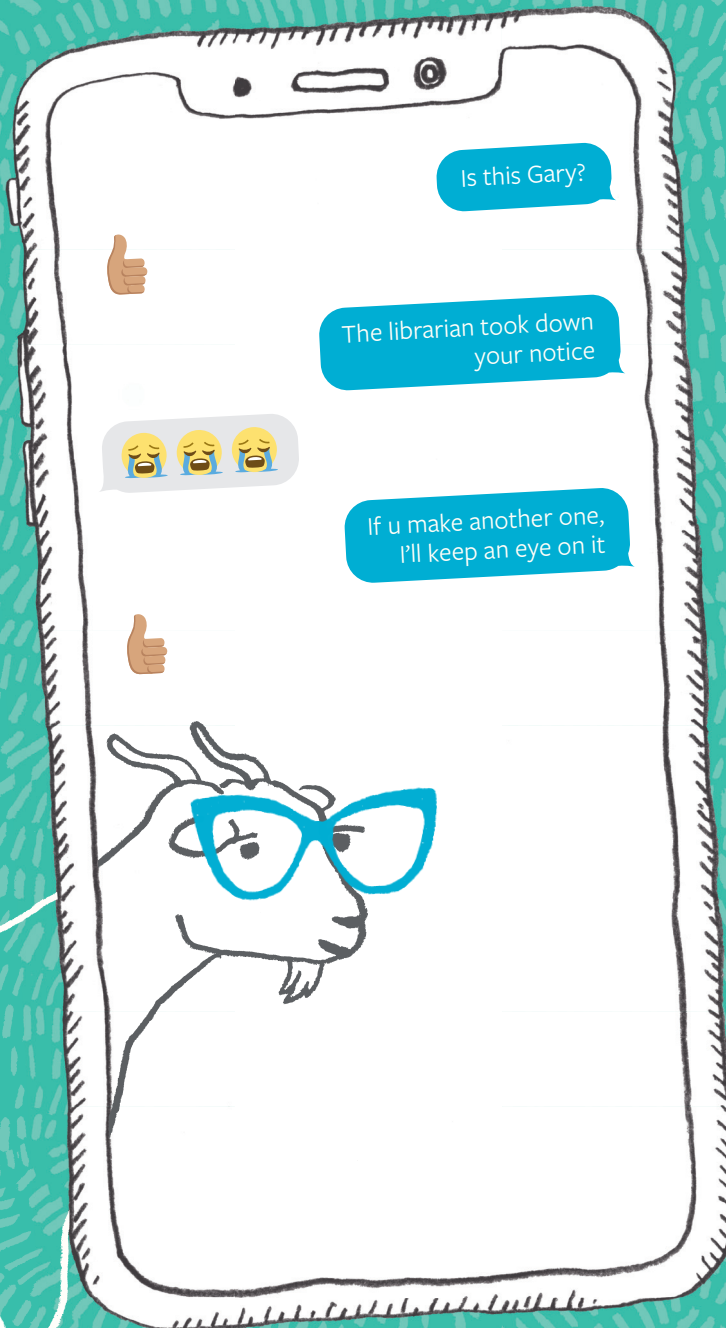

I wanted to say: MEAN! Don't do that! Instead I distracted her, smiled sweetly. Excuse me, can you please recommend some books? I like sci-fi and fantasy. We went straight to the O's. The Silver Crown by Robert C. O'Brien. Review pending, but so far, seriously creepy. Also Ghost by Jason Reynolds. Not sci-fi or fantasy – about running. When she described it, I thought, do I look like I read books about running and stuff? We'll see.

The diversion tactic worked, anyway. And Eagle Glasses knows the Newtown library like it's an extension of her brain. Plus I saved a few notices, even found space for two of my own.

Came up with some eye-catching material, pinned my notices up, and sent a prayer to the universe: Please let someone a little bit cool notice my notice (not Gary who's lost his goat, though maybe I should let him know his one's been binned).

Is this Gary?

The librarian took down
your notice

If u make another one,
I'll keep an eye on it

I saw your notice at the library. Would love to meet to discuss sometime. A community event sounds intriguing. This term, the senior syndicate's focus is leadership. It could be a great way to encourage our students to walk the talk. Tumeke! I have parent-teacher interviews this week, but perhaps a meeting after that?

Working with your kids sounds a lot better than school visits with the dog handler. Trips in the patrol car, sirens blasting etc., always fun - but keen to give something else a go.

Have been wondering about a Waitangi festival in Newtown - perhaps at the school. Now I'm thinking we call it Tumeke!

Might be too major of a major? Let me know if it's yeah slash nah.

Kia ora Piripi

You've struck gold in the staffroom. Tumeke idea excellent. A community-focused engagement will tick endless boxes with the principal and the school committee. Plus two-and-a-bit terms for dreaming up ideas. Our kids will love it.

I have non-contact on Tues, so could do 11am at that new place on Gundry St?
Forget the name, but great cheese scones.
